

Vanavil Speaks...

Balachandran sir and Mr. Siddharth have played the role of guardian angels, offering support during our times of difficulty and guiding us towards brighter prospects for the children and team at Vanavil.

They discovered our organization through a news article, reaching out to us despite our presence in a small corner of the world, and engaged with us through empathetic yet meticulous inquiries, enabling a deeper understanding of our project and ourselves. Their support has been instrumental in areas critical to our mission but often overlooked.

Through this relationship, I've come to value the inherent goodness in the universe and the significance of thorough engagement in uplifting marginalized communities in our country. Buimerc's commitment to supporting the most marginalized, almost invisible Nomadic communities serves as a beacon of hope, and we hold them in immense gratitude throughout our journey.

Their focus on strengthening grassroots organizations in structural needs represents a courageous and much-needed approach in philanthropy and CSR vision. This expression may seem emotional, but it encapsulates just a fraction of the gratitude I feel towards Balachandran Sir and his kindness.
